Bolota

Bolota promotes environmentally sustainable products and produces fashion accessories made of cork. Naturally, we do not think of cork as a material that can be used for articles such as bags or wallets, however Bolota has proven that it can be a valuable organic alternative to animal leather.

Cork is obtained from the bark of the cork oak tree (quercus suberis). This tree grows spontaneously in the Mediterranean countries, with its biggest predominance in the Southwest (Portugal, Spain, Morocco and Algeria). The harvesting process is completely harmless to the tree and it is done by the hand of very experienced workers, who are paid the highest among agricultural workers in the entire world.

The earliest employments of cork go as far back as Ancient Egypt, where bottle stoppers have been found in their tombs. Also the Romans and Greeks found the usefulness of this material, considering that they managed to manufacture many products out of it such as: floats for fishing nets, sandals, wine bottle stoppers and personal flotation devices for fishermen. As it shows from these facts, our ancestors have implemented cork in their production, and this makes us hope that we can emulate them and make the world a better place.

More recently, this wonderful material has been used in various new fields, such as the aeronautical industry, medicine, construction and aesthetics... and, last but not least, Bolota's fantastic and ecological cork fabric!

ARTISANS FROM AROUND THE GLOBE

At Prêt-à-Porter we support craftsmanship, because we think that the work of an artisan can be a work of art.

We believe that the best way to eliminate poverty is to pay workers a fair wage for their labour. By choosing us, people can create change through their everyday actions.

In order to achieve our goal, we make an effort to devolve a large part of the income to the people of the Countries that made the items.

LAOS' WAR SOUVENIRS: JEWELLERY FROM UNEXPLODED BOMBS

In Laos an estimated 80 million undetonated explosives lie scattered across the country.

For nearly a decade, U.S. warplanes dropped more than 270 million cluster munitions in Laos, making it the most bombed country in the world per capita.

Today, workers in the Southeast Asian nation continue the painstaking effort of locating, detonating and disposing these dangerous munitions.

At their current pace, it will take decades to clear the territory of unexploded ordnance.

In order to speed up the process, local craftsmen transform bomb scraps into bracelets, necklaces, earrings and various other things.

WITH THEIR WORK, THEY TURN THE UGLY EVIDENCE OF WAR INTO SOMETHING BEAUTIFUL!

MAASAI'S BEADED JEWELLERY'S MEANING

Beaded jewellery is not just used as an ornament, but it is also a vital aspect of Maasai culture.

It is utilized to indicate age and social status as well as to mark important events such as an engagement or a wedding.

Both men and women wear jewellery, however women are primarily in charge of making it.

One of the most striking aspects of the typical Maasai's jewellery is the colourfulness of it, which is not purposeless, because every colour has a specific meaning.

Blue symbolizes sustenance, energy, the sky and water.

Red represents bravery, strength and blood.

Green embodies health as well as the earth's land.

Orange denotes warmth, friendship, and hospitality.

Yellow emblemizes fertility, health, growth and the sun.

White incarnates purity and nourishment.

Black stands for unity and solidarity.

HANDMADE BARK CLOTH FROM UGANDA

Not many people are aware of the fine quality products that come from Uganda.

A beautiful country with a troublesome past but promising future, Uganda has a wide array of traditional crafts.

Bark cloth, one of the first primitive fabrics made in tropical Africa, is still produced by the Baganda people near Lake Victoria.

Once a year the men harvest the bark of the tropical fig tree. They moisten the bark, then beat it over a log with heavy wooden mallets.

The trees survive the process and regrow their bark for the next season's harvest.

Every cloth is unique, which is part of its unpredictable character. The colour is reddish brown, but will vary from piece to piece.

Bark cloth has been manufactured in Uganda for centuries and is Uganda's sole representative in the UNESCO Intangible Cultural Heritage Lists.

THE JUTE PRODUCTION OF BANGLADESH AND ITS BENEFITS FOR WOMEN AND THE ENVIRONMENT

The skilled women, many of whom previously did not have access to a formal education, have the chance to make a meaningful contribution to society with their handcraftsmanship. This career opportunity empowers the Bangladeshi women by giving them access to the labour market.

Jute is also friendly to the environment.

In fact, it takes only 20 liters of water for each kilogram of fiber necessary to make an article out of jute.

In addition, jute fibre absorbs several times more CO₂ from the atmosphere than trees and does not produce toxic gases nor harmful ones by its production.

ECUADOR'S WOOLLEN PRODUCTS

Our beautiful woollen items are made by talented women in Ecuador, more precisely in the Northern Region of the Country.

The entire process, from shearing the sheep to drying the wool, can take up to several weeks.

Each article is knitted by hand, so it is made with incredible care, using a technique that has been passed on from generation to generation.

Wool is not just a sustainable product, but as we all know, it will also keep you warm on cold nights.

In addition to its natural softness and non-allergenic properties, wool retains its composition for longer than synthetic fibers.

Any type of wool product usually has a long lifespan, making it a superb investment.

When it's finally time to retire your favorite woollen piece of clothing, you can rest easy knowing that wool is 100% biodegradable.
